Getting around

West Dean Woods, two miles north east of West Dean village, is a Site of Special Scientific Interest. It is also a working woodland on a private estate, and access is restricted to those working the coppice or making scientific research. However, a public bridleway runs along the western edge, and provides the best vantage point to view the daffodils that are at the northern end. There is a parking lay-by close to the bridleway on the minor road.
